Galileo School Wins BEA

Galileo School, of the University of Central Florida’s Professional Development Schools Consortium, won a very prestigious award—the American Psychological Association’s 2015 BEA Golden Psi Award—in recognition that the school’s mission, vision, and philosophy applies “psychological science to promote student academic and social-emotional growth and success.”

UCF’s own Dr. Eduardo Salas, from the Institute for Simulation and Training (IST), will be presenting the award on behalf of APA to Dr. Michele Gill and the Galileo School principal on Monday, May 18th.

The BEA Golden Psi Award is given to schools that positively affect “student academic and social-emotional learning and development” and have committed to sustaining these efforts.

The Galileo School received $1,000 as part of this award, as well as forthcoming recognition at the APA Annual Convention, in the Monitor on Psychology magazine, and on APA’s website.
